THE IMPACT OF ADVERSE CHILDHOOD EXPERIENCES

Adverse Childhood Experiences (ACE's) happen all over the world and usually within families. Evidence from the past 25 years has shown us that these have a cumulative effect, in that the more of these experiences a child has the greater the impact will be in later life in terms of health, addiction, mental health problems, incarceration and violence. Working in children's homes we see many children affected in this way and working in addiction services we can also see the results of early experiences. I also believe these experiences tend to be intergenerational in that they get passed from one generation to the next.

PROF. RICHARD PATES

Richard is a founder member and former president of ISAJE. He had been the Editor in Chief of the Journal of Substance Use for the past 20 years. He is a Consultant Clinical Psychologist by profession working mainly in the field of addiction, children from very troubled backgrounds and sexual health and a visiting Professor of Psychology at the University of Worcester. He has published 40 or so papers and book chapters and books on Injecting Illicit Drugs, on the Treatment of Amphetamine Problems and on International Harm Reduction.
